

The present invention relates to a method for growing oxide thin films which contain barium and/or strontium. According to the method, such thin films are made by the ALE technique by using as precursors for barium and strontium their cyclopentadienyl compounds. A thin film made by means of the invention has a high permittivity and excellent conformality.

5